BACKGROUND INFO:

At a very young age, Abbey had been found lying near a spring pool in the mountains Northeast of Hohhot, China, near the Mongolian boarder, and was taken in by a small group of monks. It was obvious to all who saw him; he had not been cared for in some time and was cautiously welcomed into the small village. The day of his birth was decidedly coinciding with the New Year. Sheltered from the rest of the world, Abbey grew, studying along side the other children who arrived at the village. A natural, soon becoming proficient in Lee Family style, Abbey was then referred to greater Shaolin monk, Choi Fook, to further his martial arts knowledge. At the approximate age of 20, Abbey came to the decision that he would leave this home. He felt he needed to leave. He knew this is not where he belonged, although it was all he knew.

Acquired by The Agency, enroute to the United States, Abbey joined as an asset to cultural connections in Northern China. Because of his sheltered upbringing, Abbey has shown low level signs of Demophobia, even as he continues his exercises aimed at acquiring GONG FU or "Internal Mastery", one of the most important and sought after elements of the Shaolin monks training.
