BACKGROUND INFO:

Julius began his larcenous career fresh out of the Bronx, where he earned his handle. He ran away from a foster home and slowly meandered his way down the eastern seaboard until he reached Washington, D.C. His lock picking skills were just good enough to get him into trouble with a local gang that made a career of breaking into wealthy homes and grabbing as much loot as possible before the police showed up. Julius was apprehended and did a few months hard time at the infamous Central Detention Facility in southeast Washington. It was there that he learned the con trade from some of the best minds in the business.

Narcis pulled an elaborate con game fresh out of prison. He targeted a famous rock star, bilking him for nearly $8 million dollars before disappearing into the seamy underbelly of Washington. Two days later, he awoke to find his newly-acquired funds electronically confiscated from his myriad of false accounts.

That day a courier arrived with a letter for him. It read, "Nice try, but your execution needs a little work." The package also contained a business card from the man he'd stolen from, rock star Johnny Silver. He took up an apprenticeship with Agent Rockstar and has never looked back.
