BACKGROUND INFO:

Grew up in New York all his life. Is the sixth child out of a Italian family of ten. Never went to college after receiving his high school diploma. Grew up helping his father at his mechanics shop fixing cars and motorcycles. Also worked in the private aircraft sector, maintaining personally owned helicopters. Obtained both a vehicle and rotary wing aircraft license by the young age of twenty. Has been known to have a lucky gambling knack, as he has made numerous trips to Las Vegas for various tournaments and has won on several of them. Is very charismatic and liked by the public, especially the female crowd. Has been employed in various courier companies where he has ended up being terminated by all of them due to excessive speed and traffic tickets being issued.

Criminal background record: 27 counts of unpaid traffic violations, consisting of excessive speed, resisting arrest and reckless vehicular endangerment. Was ordered to serve three years in jail, but after Agency interjection and negotiations, all charges were dropped, and was offered employment within the Agency, which he accepted. Has acquired an infatuation for plastic explosives and other dangerously combustible materials after attending Agency issued explosives seminars, classes and workshops.

Was involved in a massive accidental explosion on a five star multi-million dollar archeology jungle action/thriller movie in 2006. Four people were killed in the blast along with eighteen others wounded. Agent was the only one who came out of the failed explosive vehicle stunt unscathed. The RAW explosives used in the scene were tripled so as too make for a better shot, which was ordered by the set director. It was later revealed of the attempts to lessen the explosive amounts in the stunt by the Agent, which obviously landed on deaf ears.
