BACKGROUND INFO:

Born in Vancouver, she grew up in Burnaby just a few miles away. Her mother, Beverly, is the Commanding Officer of the Pacific Region of the RCMP. Her father Kevin owns a structural engineering consulting firm in Burnaby and travel around the area giving seminars. She was a very clever child, getting away with things that even her investigative mother never knew. As she grew older, more and more she wanted to be involved in law enforcement and trying to keep the streets in her neighborhood safe from the newly emerging gang population. She entered into the Royal Military College in Kingston, Ontario where she excelled academically, but barely made it by the physical rigors of military training, however mastering the firing range at the top of her class. After graduating with her degree in Science/Mathematics, she went back home and attended the University of British Columbia where she Majored in Law and Minored in Russian. She soon went to work with her mother and the RCMP in Vancouver and working undercover to help get rid of the gang presence in the area, which had grown considerably since she was young. Using brains rather than brawn to apprehend criminals, she was one of the single biggest factors in helping to clean up the streets and quickly. The province and the city of Vancouver recognized her for her outstanding achievements. However appreciative of these awards and praise, she felt as though she was being held back in her current position. She went looking for something that would give her that excitement when she was little. The Agency, in it's search for new blood, came across her stellar academics and law enforcement history and recruited her. She trained with them and decided she had found that fire that she was looking for with her position at The Agency and has decided to stay.

Shortly after her agency training, and just before leaving on her first mission, Isabelle got word from her father that he was going to be out of the country in London for quite some time as a special consultant for the restructuring and rebuilding of the city where a terrorist bomb had destroyed several city blocks surrounding and including Big Ben.
