BACKGROUND INFO:

Magpie spent most of her life as an orphan, her father disappearing before she could talk and her mother spiraling into depression and self harm, eventually committing suicide 9 years ago. As a result Magpie grew up into a somewhat rough and tumble life, getting involved with gangs, stealing and a brief sting of drug abuse.

She pins the change in attitude to a single moment, when a 9 year old boy OD'd after being pressured by gang members. She said nothing at the time, but spent the next year gathering evidence to bring as many of those involved to justice as she could. After a series of police raids her gang caught her and beat her to within an inch of her life, leaving her with permanent scarring on her arms and body (for whatever reason they avoided her face), after spending months in hospital the police offered her witness protection, which she refused - instead asking how else she could help.

The Agency picked her up a year ago, after she assisted them with a long term operation in London. She's refused the offer of surgery to heal her scars, saying they remind her of who she is. Despite her sometimes violent past, Magpie considers violence the last resort, and prefers to go unarmed when feasible.
