Graduated Columbia University Law School, earning his degree in Constitutional Law and Legal Philosophy. At the age of 35, joined the Archdiocese in his hometown of Portland, Maine. Served as an administrator for several years, and returned to Columbia to earn another degree in Religious Studies with an emphasis on Youth ministry. When the child-molestation scandal in Boston occurred, he left the Catholic diocese in protest to the cover-up that had been happening for years. Became an outstanding child advocate as a member of the firm Cortland, Bailey and Jonagold. He remains a deeply spiritual man, something he credits his success to. Recruited for his contacts and background, The Agency and he both believe their agendas can be better served with each other's help.
