BACKGROUND INFO:

The long career in espionage by Devon Holt started in the early 70's, where he was running counter-intelligence for the US military against the Vietcong. After the war ended in US retreat, he disappeared completely. The CIA spent over ten years looking for him but all operations were unsuccessful, and afterward his name and suspected whereabouts were secretly turned over to Interpol to continue looking. Rumors of his locations and positions within different governments and militaries were many, but nothing could be done to trace him down.

Sometime in 1995(accounts vary), he ended any apparent manhunt for him by walking straight into Central Intelligence headquarters in Langley and turning himself in. After a lengthy debriefing, believed to have lasted at least six months, he was pulled from the CIA super-max prison where he was awaiting trial to work directly for the Agency. Even though he may still be a security risk and his allegiance is to himself alone, the knowledge and experience he brings is unmatched. Believed to have an extensive network of allies, both within friendly and enemy nations across the world.

Since joining, he has demonstrated professionalism and has worked well to bring success to himself and the Agency. All who work for him compliment him on his uncompromising demeanor, but are surprised at his lack of emotion. The rumor is, that since he has been everywhere and done everything, nothing surprises him anymore.
