BACKGROUND INFO:

Born in Kiev during the Soviet era, Nicholas Ivanskyi was conscripted into the Soviet army right before the collapse of the Soviet Union. After his 2-year service Nicholas enlisted in the new Ukrainian army and, after receiving a degree from the Kiev Technical Institute, was promoted to Sergeant in the 275th airmobile battalion. Eventually Nicholas was selected for service in the elite Ukrainian OMON, and his unit fought alongside Russian OMON units in the 1999-2000 invasion of Chechnya.

Disillusioned by the brutality he witnessed in this action Nicholas resigned from the OMON and began looking for a more honorable life as a professional soldier. He was first approached by the Agency while serving as a bodyguard for the U.N in Goma, DRC (Democratic Republic of Congo). After several years of living in barracks in most of the undeveloped world, a position with an American agency and access to carpeting and running water was too attractive a draw for Nicholas to resist.
