MISSION BRIEFING:

The race to map known species of living organisms from around the world has been very close with no real predominant force since the mid nineties. Many different and ingenious technological advancements have been developed over the last fifteen years, including a giant leap forward in the development of virtual reality dynamic genome mapping software and expansive algorithmic genetic theory. One such company that is emerging in the forefront of manufacturing some of the most powerful genome mapping software programs is Cylex Systems, based out of Australia. The company sells very stable genome mapping software to scientific community and facilities all over the world. Allegations of unethical and illegal activities in the designing and possible utilization of some of their prototype software systems has come up as of late by some very powerful organizations, including the Agency. Your mission is to infiltrate Cylex Systems, gather any evidence of illegal and/or unethical activities and bring them back to the Agency. Your presence must go unnoticed so as not to arouse suspicion and casualties should be kept to a minimum. Rendezvous with your contact at the designated time and place for further details.

MISSION DEBRIEFING:

Mission completed 11:39 pm on 6-6-09.

Agents made their way to Sydney Australia where they were briefed on Cylex Systems via their contact where an infiltration through the ventilation system was formulated. Agents proceeded to disable the alarm system on the ventilation ducts on the Cylex Systems roof and began to navigate through the crowded ductwork. The team hardwired into a trunk line directly over the security server room where they hacked into the system and controlled the security system of the facility. A couple close calls with security guards and Cylex Systems staff almost exposed the presence of the team during their thorough search of any incriminating evidence in the many office and workrooms throughout the facility. A hidden memo giving the green light to start testing on Project Rebirth was found in Damien Ashburner's office who apparently fled the scene before Agents could restrain him. Agents proceeded to hack into Cylex Systems main super computer where they downloaded the entire Project Rebirth file, which was deemed to dangerous a project by Cylex System and was cancelled 6 months before the hidden memo was written. The team successfully made their way out of the facility with the evidence but not before almost being exposed, which led to the authorities being called and a breaking and entering report being filed by Cylex Systems. This was the confirmation the Agency needed to extrapolate that something illegal was in fact being conducted in Cylex Systems, but not necessary with the facilities knowledge, and intends to investigate further.
