MISSION BRIEFING:

Simon Drexon, a former NSA operative, has been spotted at the first two NHL championship hockey games in Carolina. The Agency believes he will attend the third game of the series tomorrow night in Edmonton, Canada. Drexon is a high-priority fugitive throughout the world and has not been seen in public for several years, so this is a rare opportunity. Your mission is to proceed to Edmonton, track him down and capture him quietly. Drexon is a major security risk to the US, so you will need to avoid the local authorities. Other intelligence agencies throughout the world may also be after Drexon so be on guard for anything out of the ordinary. If capture is no longer an option, the use of lethal force is permitted to take him out. Your flight to Edmonton Airport leaves in 2 hours.

MISSION DEBRIEFING:

Mission Completed: Saturday June 10, 2006 7:45 PM

Agents arrived in Edmonton early Saturday morning and set up a stakeout of the arena and a base of operations at a nearby hotel. After some investigation, Agents discovered Drexon's motel room, but it was empty. A plan involving impersonating a local reporter and her cameraman was implemented, later the remainder of the team was able to obtain tickets by blending in with the local tailgaters. Once inside, agents subdued a member of the event staff and impersonated him, and began to execute a plan involving a fan giveaway. The search went rather quickly with agents inside the control room and throughout the arena, even a Zamboni was commandeered for this purpose. The team's plan was successful, catching Drexon off guard leaving his seat. The agents then escorted him to the more secluded sections of the stadium before rendering him unconscious and delivering him to the Agency transport at Edmonton City Center Airport.
