MISSION BRIEFING:

The Agency is led to believe that the Hikoratachi corporation has developed the means to create self- powered super conductive micro transistor computer chips. The company is owned and ran by Mr. Shouling Hikoratachi, a native of Japan. These highly sought after computer chips, would grant the owner a level of superiority unmatched over the world's computer market, not to mention possessing one of the fastest and most robust computer systems in the world. If these powered computer chips were to fall into the wrong hands, it would provide them with a technological edge over the entire world, which could lead to any number of attacks against countless government agencies or countries. Your mission is to infiltrate the Hikoratachi manufacturing plant in San Jose, CA without being discovered or your covers blown. Use any means necessary to obtain information on the progress or completion of the self-powered computer chips. Your flight leaves in two hours with an ETA of 6:30 PM at the San Jose Airport. Rendezvous with your contact at the designated time and place for further details.

MISSION DEBRIEFING:

Mission completed on 11/24/2005.

Agents set up head quarters in San Jose, California and acquired mission information from contact at the California Theatre. Encountered numerous altercations involving inner-city gangs, with suspected ties to the Hikoratachi Corporation and family, ranging from back-alley shootouts to an alleged bomb attack where the bomber posed as a Dominoes pizza delivery driver. The Agency agreed to agent requests, to expunge all evidence and ties to one of the agent's vehicles involved in the mission, so as to protect agent identities. Agents formed and executed a plan for an infiltration attempt into the Hikoratachi plant to extract computer chips and/or any information leading to the schematics or sale there of. Departed to Tokyo, Japan where agents designed and implemented a tactical assault on Shouling Hikoratachi's homestead in hopes of capturing the computer chips before they were sold. The assault involved a timed, power brownout to the strike zone, along with many vehicular chases and multiple shootouts between agents and Hikoratachi affiliated personnel. Many casualties ensued in the completion of the mission, along with the fiery deaths of Kenzo and Tsung Po Hikoratachi, in which Tsung Po's body was never found due to the magnitude and brutality of his vehicular accident during a high-speed chase. One agent's account of the destruction of Tsung Po's body, at the height of the accident, was due to the precision and power generated from the agent's firearm. The Agency cannot confirm nor deny this, at this time.
