MISSION BRIEFING:

Good afternoon. As many of you know in this new world of global terrorism, the control and monitoring of uranium, in any form, has become incredibly important. Recently, a conglomerate company called Pyramid Mining purchased the rights to an abandoned mining site in Australia, the Rum Jungle mine, which they claim to be using to produce silver. But, the Agency has little information on Pyramid, and Rum Jungle has been known to produce small levels of uranium. Your mission is to travel to Bachelor, Australia, to the Rum Jungle Mine and conduct surveillance on Pyramid Mining's operation there. If necessary, you will need to infiltrate the site and obtain photos of records to prove or disprove any wrongdoings by Pyramid. Your presence in the area should remain undetected unless it becomes necessary for you to break protocol. After all, if Pyramid is dirty, we don't want to tip them off. Your flight to Darwin leaves in 1 hour. Good luck.

MISSION DEBRIEFING:

Mission Completed: 5-10-09, 2:00AM Local Time

Team received briefing and traveled through Darwin on the way to Bachelor, Australia and set up a HQ at the local resort. An initial scouting of the Rum Jungle mine showed little, but the site was blocked off by an electrified fence. The team pulled back and moved into Bachelor to talk to the locals. The citizens of Bachelor had little to say about Pyramid, but did stress their dislike of their tactics involving closing down areas around the mine and interfering with the local tourist business. They also said no one from Pyramid was seen around town, and only some non-descript vans were seen coming or going from Rum Jungle. After leaving the townsfolk, the team waited until after midnight and used to cover of darkness to infiltrate the site. While inside the mine, the team encountered some local wildlife, but found no other signs of life. The discovered a shack containing a core driller, which was recently used, and a small office building. This office building had appeared to have been cleaned out. With no more information or leads the team returned to The Agency. It is the Agency belief that this was a dead end, and further research shows Pyramid is in the process of abandoning the Rum Jungle project, so there appears to be no further need for Agency efforts here.
